We're Number One . . . Again! UNC-G soccer coach Michael Parker holds aloft the NCAA Division III national championship soccer trophy as jubilant Spartan players and fans celebrate the victory over Washington University. The Spartans traveled to St. Louis to defeat the Bears of "Wash U." by a score of five-to-nothing on December 8. This is the third time in the past four years that UNC-G has won the national Division III soccer championship.

At McIver Conference

The Continuing Tradition of Excellence

Excellence. The term has become the catchword of the eighties. Heard in boardrooms and seen on book covers, the word has found its way to college campuses as if it were never before used.

But Excellence is not a neologism at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Excellence is a tradition that began nearly one hundred years ago when Dr. McIver welcomed the first students here.

The ninth annual McIver Conference, held last October at Founders' Day, celebrated Excellence on our campus. The focus was on teaching excellence. Seven past recipients of the Alumni Teaching Excellence Awards were asked to deliver a favorite lecture, describe current research, or expound upon a pet theory.

Return to the classroom in the next pages and experience a sample of the teaching excellence found at your alma mater.

“Natural Gardens of North Carolina”

Dr. Hollis Rogers came to the University in 1947 to teach nature study, plant ecology, local flora, and general botany. During the thirty-two years which followed until his retirement in 1979, it is estimated that he taught 17,000 students. He was instrumental in organizing the present system of high school science fairs in 1955. He served as consultant to the National Science Foundation on the quality of high school biology instruction. He received an Alumni Teaching Excellence Award in 1974. Dr. Rogers is many things; a pioneer in outdoor education in North Carolina, he was a leader in ecological conservation for many years before it became fashionable; he is a “Leaf Watcher” who is consulted about when the North Carolina mountain leaf color is at its peak; he is a naturalist; he is a nature photographer; and he is a film maker, producing two films. One is titled Effects of Climate on Vegetation in North Carolina, the other, Natural Gardens of North Carolina, was shown as a special treat to the audience at McIver Conference. The film, is based upon B. W. Wells book, The Natural Gardens of North Carolina, which was written over fifty years ago. The entire text of the book is read in the film by James L. Longworth Jr. '76. Stephanie Sigmon '72 sings and plays the guitar for the film's background music. The film explores the natural treasures we may enjoy from North Carolina's mountains to her coastline.

One hundred years ago 80 per cent of North Carolina was a natural garden. But then we started wiping it out with “improvements.”

The North Carolina Nature Conservatory has two million dollars in which to save what is left. Bluff Mountain in Ashe County, the Roanoke Bottom lands in the Coastal area, Bat's Cave and Carolina Gap at Nags Head are the only lands left that are truly natural North Carolina. There is nothing in the Piedmont; Hanging Rock, Umstead, and Morrow State Parks are actually recovered wastelands that we started restoring fifty years ago.

The state and national parks of North Carolina are fairly secure and protected, like the Smokies, Blue Ridge, and Seashore areas. The state game lands are the only places for rare and endangered species to exist in North Carolina.

In 1918 North Carolina started to save its natural treasures and to study them. However, even today our state's national forests can be sold off to harvest at virtually any hour. Fortunately Uwharrie was saved from that fate.

The natural treasures of North Carolina must be constantly guarded for future generations to appreciate and enjoy. ■

“Historical Aspects of the Irish Question”

Dr. Ronald D. Cassell is an assistant professor of history at the University. He has been a member of the faculty since 1966. Holding a bachelor of science and a master of arts degree from the University of Michigan, Dr. Cassell earned his PhD at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He is a specialist in modern British history with additional interests in military history and biography. Dr. Cassell was a member of the faculty of the 1984 Alumni College. He was active in the development of the University's two-semester western civilization program in the College of Arts and Sciences, and he served as the program's first coordinator. In 1984 Dr. Cassell received an Alumni Teaching Excellence Award.

Ireland today represents the great failure of political and cultural integration in the British Isles. From the middle ages to the eighteenth century, England successfully incorporated both Wales and Scotland into the Kingdom of Great Britain. Subsequently, after two hundred years of harsh but informal control, the Act of Union of 1800 sought to extend the same principle to Ireland as well. But the legacy of sectarian division and political and economic oppression made cultural and political divisions far deeper and more pervasive in Ireland than they had proved to be in the other regions of the United Kingdom.

In the early decades of the Union the old ascendancy of the Protestant landlords remained basically intact. Catholics were prohibited from participating directly in either local or central government and were burdened with many other grievances with respect to landholding, discrimination, and the cost of the Church of Ireland. The nineteenth century saw a progressive change in these conditions as one barrier after another fell before the Irish nationalist advocates and English reformers so that by the time of the First World War, Catholic Irishmen were politically, religiously and economically far better off than their forebears. Yet in that same period Ireland became more, not less, rebellious. As one wag put it, "Every time the English came up with an answer to the Irish question the Irish changed the question." Conditions worsened in the wake of the Easter Rising of 1916, which led inexorably to the guerilla war between Irish patriots and British troops in 1919-21 and to the Treaty of December 1921, which created the Irish Free State.

Under the circumstances this was a remarkable achievement. Though weak, backward and divided, Ireland had defied and humbled the British empire at the peak of its power and prestige. In so doing Irish nationalists provided the rest of the colonial world with both hope and seminal lessons in revolutionary tactics and terrorism. Yet this was but a partial and flawed victory, for not only did the rebels proceed to fall out among themselves — a process which produced yet another phase of civil war in which former colleagues killed off each other — but the six largely Protestant counties in Ulster refused to be part of the new state. Partition established Northern Ireland, which has since become in microcosm what all of Ireland once was. Thus, the legacy of sectarian and racial violence characteristic of the nineteenth century continues to erupt periodically in our own day — the ghost of an Irish history which will not die.

Ireland illustrates the penalties which can result from the failure of a political community to overcome religious and cultural divisions and ancient oppressions and grievances. By and large the English displayed remarkable common sense and moderation in dealing with the profound social and economic challenges of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Few nations responded as constructively to those problems. The Irish problem was and remains an unfortunate exception. ■

"The Essential Emily Dickinson"

Dr. Murray D. Arndt is an assistant professor of English and director of the Residential College. He was the first Master of the Residential College. He has been a member of the faculty since 1968. He received both his bachelor's and master's degrees from Catholic University. He earned his PhD at Duke University. Specializing in nineteenth century American poetry and literature, one of his most popular courses is a literary study of the Bible. Dr. Arndt has been involved in developing programs at the University to integrate materials in a multidisciplinary approach to teaching. He received an Alumni Teaching Excellence Award in 1983.

One can say of all Emily Dickinson's poetic experiments that their purpose — and when right, their result — is to push her poems beyond the logical limits of language. While this may mean that she sacrifices some goals of communication, i.e. that her work is erratic rather than developmental and intense rather than extensive, it also allows her to achieve, in what sometimes seems a magically explosive manner, poems that are ambiguously complex, richly mysterious, and courageously unresolved. I use the following poem by Emily Dickinson as an example.

Essential Oils — are wrung —
The Attar from the Rose
Be not expressed by Suns — alone —
It is the gift of Screws —

The General Rose — decay —
But this — in Lady's Drawer Make Summer — When the Lady lie
In Ceaseless Rosemary —

"Essential Oils" is a poem characteristic of the Dickinson magic; it is a series of words and phrases presented in such idiosyncratic and dynamic relationships that they defy the logical limits to which, as language, they would ordinarily be subject. They suggest a rich complexity of meaning that would otherwise be unavailable.

On its most rational level the poem is simply about the destructive pressure to which flowers must be subjected in order to produce perfume and how that sweet-smelling essence can mask even the stink of death. But clearly the poem is restless at that level. The vocabulary, especially in the first stanza, is too heavy for perfume production. "Essential," "Attar," "expressed," "and "Screws" are all accurate characterizations of the press of essence from flowers, but they suggest more. The fact that the essential oils are "expressed" clearly leads the poem to another level, one that I would call "non-rational." At this level the poem is about art. Dickinson suggests in the first stanza the need for the artist to submit to dreadful pressures — like the flowers to Screws — to produce essential work. In the second stanza she flirts with the Keatsian assertion that work so set apart from the general provides the artist with a kind of immortality, "summer," though the artist "lie in ceaseless Rosemary." But the poem resonates still further; on a third — I would say irrational — level, it struggles with or towards an Augustinian affirmation that spiritual "essentiality" can only be achieved by accepting great physical and psychological pain, even the anguished possibility of self-deception. ■

"Observing the Motor Development of Children"

Dr. Kate Barrett is a professor in the department of physical education. Dr. Barrett came to the University in 1970. She is nationally known as a specialist in methods of elementary school physical education and has particular interest in motor skill learning and development in children. Dr. Barrett did her undergraduate study at Bouve-Boston College of Tufts University. She completed graduate study for the master of science and PhD degrees at the University of Wisconsin at Madison. She was one of the two senior authors of the textbook, Physical Education for Teaching: A Focus on the Teaching Process. And she has another claim to fame; between 1956 and 1965 she was a member of the United States women's field hockey and lacrosse teams. In 1984 she received an Alumni Teaching Excellence Award.

As a physical educator, I am interested in studying movement and how it changes or develops over time. One of my responsibilities in the department of physical education is to work with students at both the undergraduate and graduate levels helping them understand children's physical education both from a theoretical and a practical perspective. Learning to become skillful at observing children's movement and how it changes over time is a vehicle that unifies both perspectives. Its importance as a teaching skill should be obvious; teachers who cannot observe accurately the movement response of the children they are teaching will not be able to help them improve their performance, for it is through what teachers "see" that gives them the necessary information to decide how to help them.

My approach to observing the motor development of children is qualitative in nature. It focuses on the process of movement itself; that is to say, it looks at the "movement in the movement," not the end product. For example, if you observed a child throwing a ball for distance, you would look at how the arm prepared itself to release the ball, or to what extent the trunk rotated to increase the range of motion, or to what extent the humerus or forearm "lagged" before the ball was released, or how the feet were placed as the child shifted his/her weight over the front foot. Besides focusing on the process of movement, this approach to observing allows you to make a judgment about how mature the motor skill is. For example, if you noticed that the child's humerus pointed in the direction of the throw right from the start, and the throwing action looked more like a push rather than a throw, you would interpret that pattern to mean that the child is at an early stage of development. Interpreting this action as a "stage of development" implies also, that what the child is doing in not "wrong," rather the child's throw is at an early stage of development.

Besides being interested in observing the process of movement by focusing on the components of the body (trunk, humerus, forearm, feet, etc.) and what they are actually doing, I am also interested in seeing the quality of the movement, or said another way, its dynamic changes. These changes can be seen in relation to the force of the movement, the changes of speed used, the amount of space a movement takes, and the way movements follow each other or flow through the body, or the way they are controlled or not controlled.

While some technical knowledge is needed to see movement accurately, assessing movement is something that can be learned. There is no doubt as to the importance of this skill for both teachers and parents alike. With the recent advances in technology, especially with the new videotaping capabilities, the possibilities for increasing our skill in observing children's motor skill development is unlimited. Wouldn't it be exciting if, in the future, physical education teachers could view with parents videotapes of their children's progress in motor skill development that had occurred during the school year? ■

"Setting Standards on the National Teacher Examinations for the State of North Carolina"

Dr. "Chris" Busch is an associate professor in the School of Education. A member of the faculty of the University since 1970, he received an Alumni Teaching Excellence Award in 1982. He did his undergraduate work at Niagara University and his master's study at St. John's University. He earned a doctorate in Education at the University of Tennessee. Dr. Busch is a specialist in educational measurement.

In 1978 members of the State Board of Education and the Board of Governors of the University of North Carolina pledged themselves and their staffs to a project designed to ensure that quality professional personnel are recruited for the public schools of North Carolina.

Since my specialty is in educational research methodology I was asked to assist in the project.

One aspect of the joint resolution of the State Board and the Board of Governors was, "The development of more effective screening and counseling procedures to ensure that students who wish to enter professional teacher education programs meet acceptable standards in such academic areas as English and English usage, literature, the fine arts, social studies, mathematics, and science; such procedures are to be administered prior to admission to professional teacher education programs."

After considerable study by both Boards of how this goal could be achieved, the State Board of Education adopted a resolution requiring the use of Core Battery Tests I and II, (the General Knowledge Test and the Communication Skills Test) of the National Teacher Examinations (NTE) in screening all applicants for admission to North Carolina's teacher education programs. More specifically, all prospective teacher education students in the public and private institutions of higher education in the State were to have successfully completed the Core Batteries I and II of the NTE prior to the completion of their junior year in order to be formally accepted into an approved teacher education program.

Since the State has the responsibility to provide quality teachers, it follows that the State also has the responsibility to screen and evaluate teacher candidates. In screening applicants to teacher training, the State must be fair in the standards or passing scores which it sets for admission. We had the task of recommending standards and spent eighteen months of study addressing that concern.

Judgments on an appropriate passing score for the NTE were obtained from a statewide sample of 306 public school teachers and college and university faculty members. Each of those judges spent an entire day reviewing the individual items comprising a subtest, and provided recommendations on the appropriate passing score on the subtest and on the validity of the subtest.

One concern we had during this process was the potential effect of chance errors that were due to either measurement error or to the particular sample of judges used in the study. That is, the State has the responsibility to ensure that no applicant is denied admission solely because of random and capricious procedural errors. The procedures we used to obtain a recommended passing score explicitly addressed this important issue. ■

“Moral Reasoning in Family Relationships”

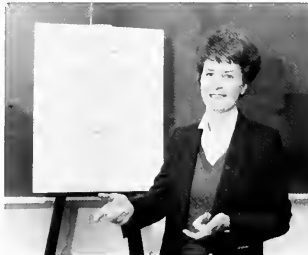

Dr. Rebecca Smith is a professor in the department of child development and family relations in the School of Home Economics. A member of the faculty since 1958, she is three times an alumna of the University having earned a bachelor of science, a master of science, and a PhD degree at UNC-G. She received an Alumni Teaching Excellence Award in 1972. The next year the National Council on Family Relations presented her its Osborne Award for Teaching. In 1976 she received the School of Home Economics' Distinguished Home Economics Alumni Award. In 1979, the North Carolina Family Life Council presented her its highest honor, the Irwin V. Sperry Award, for her contributions toward improving family relations in the state.

In discussing moral reasoning in family relationships I pose eight questions for your consideration.

First, is the family a seedbed of moral dilemmas? Examples of dilemmas: whether to put your mother in a nursing home or bring her home to live with you; whether to go back to work before your children are in school.

Second, what constitutes a moral dilemma? A dilemma is called “moral” only when there are two or more human beings involved. It comes about when there are either conflicting rights or competing claims.

Third, what is the highest level of moral reasoning? It is “justice” when all parties have been fairly dealt with, and it is “equity” when all parties have been fairly dealt with even when each one did

“God and His Lovers: Erotic Love in the Hindu Religious Tradition”

Dr. Paul B. Courtright is an associate professor and head of the department of religious studies. A member of the faculty since 1976, he received an Alumni Teaching Excellence Award in 1981. He holds a bachelor of arts degree from Grinnell College, a master of divinity degree from Yale University, and a master of arts and PhD degrees from Princeton University. As a young college student, Dr. Courtright's sights were set on the ministry, but his collegiate studies and a year spent as a visiting fellow in India convinced him that his interests lay in the study and teaching of the religious experience, especially in non-Western traditions. A Fellow of the Royal Asiatic Society of London, he has also been a Ford Foundation Fellow and a National Endowment for the Humanities Fellow. In 1984 he was appointed to a three-year term as Director of the Conference of Religion in South India, an organization of 125 scholars who concentrate their interests on the southern portion of India.

In the Hindu religious tradition of India, god comes in many forms: as a heroic warrior, a world-renouncing ascetic, a child, a loving mother, a fierce and punishing mother, and as a young and handsome lover.

The god Krishna is the paradigm of romantic and erotic love in the world of Hinduism. He appears as a young cowherd in the idyllic pastoral setting of villages of North India. There he captures the love of the cowherd maidens (Gopis) and steals their hearts.

One such maiden in particular, Radha, becomes the one of whom the poets and theologians of this strand of the Hindu tradition particularly speak about. Radha loves Krishna with such self-abandoning intensity that she leaves her home and family to meet him secretly in the forest, where the trees and flowers are full of bloom on the eve of the monsoon rains, for midnight trysts of love. This love affair is spoken about and evoked in poetry, both in the classical Sanskrit language and in the songs sung in vernacular tongues better understood by the common devotee. It is elaborated by theologians who see in Radha and Krishna the paradigm for the relationship

The Spartans Roll On

by Ty Buckner '85

Sports Information Director

A successful team will aim high and then strive to meet lofty goals.

The UNC-G soccer team decided in August it would set its sights on winning the NCAA Division III national championship.

Second-year coach Michael Parker said the goal was reachable. "We believe we have the talent and determination to do it," he said during preseason practice.

The Spartans made believers of themselves and the University community, posting a 20-5 overall record and capturing the Division III crown for the third time in four years.

Coach Parker's squad whipped Washington University, 5-0, on December 8 in St. Louis, MO, for the title.

The resounding victory was a record-setting performance Parker described as his team's best of the season.

"The first forty-five minutes was probably the best half for any team I've ever coached," said Parker, who won three national soccer championships in eight years at Lock Haven (PA) University. "I don't think it was a case of Washington playing that badly. We just seemed to get better and better as the game went on.

"It was definitely our best performance of the season, and it represented the great progress the team had made since August," he added. When we played to our potential, as in the playoffs, no one could beat us."

The Spartans really never gave Washington a chance to win the final game, posting the greatest victory margin in twenty-seven years of NCAA soccer tournament competition in all divisions.

Junior forward Andrew Mehalko of Hialeah, FL, paced UNC-G to the victory, setting one tournament record and tying three others in the process. Mehalko netted three of the Spartans' four goals in the first half and finished the tournament with six goals and three assists in five games — a new record.

Sophomore forward Willie Lopez of Miami, FL, scored the fourth Spartan goal and sophomore midfielder Steve Harrison of Derbyshire, England, netted the final goal.

Mehalko was the team's scoring leader for the season with seventeen goals and seven assists while Lopez scored twelve goals and made fourteen assists and Harrison netted twelve goals and made six assists.

Senior goalkeeper Rich Schlentz of Freehold, NJ, recorded his ninth shutout victory in the final game and finished the season having allowed just twenty goals in twenty-four games against the toughest slate of opponents a UNC-G team has ever faced.

UNC-G tied Babson College of Wellesley, MA, for the most Division III national championships with three and improved its tournament record in five years to 17-2.

Two Spartans received All-American recognition for outstanding play. Junior midfielder Brian Japp of North Miami, FL, was named first-team Division III All-America, while Harrison was named third-team All-America.

Japp is the third UNC-G player to receive first-team All-America honors, joining midfielder Ed Radwanski (1983, 1984) and forward Mike Sweeney (1983).

Other accomplishments by the soccer team during its championship season included:

- capturing the Dixie Conference championship for the fifth straight year and increasing its streak of regular-season conference victories to 26.
- defeating three of the six Division I teams it faced, including Wake Forest University, 2-1, Appalachian State University, 5-2, and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, 2-1. The victory over UNC-CH was the Spartans' first in four tries.
- placing six players on the Division III All-South team and nine players on the All-Dixie Conference team.
- Coach Parker was named NCAA Division III Coach-of-the-Year, South Region Coach-of-the-Year and Conference Co-Coach-of-the-year. ■

Class Notes are based on information received by personal letters, news clippings, and press releases. The deadline for the spring issue is February 15, 1986.

Alumni are listed in Class Notes with their undergraduate class even if subsequent degrees were earned at UNC-G. An advanced degree following a name indicates that the undergraduate degree was earned from another institution. A "C" following a class date identifies a Commercial class; an "x" indicates a non-graduate. City and county names not otherwise identified are located in North Carolina.

Martha went on to graduate in 1909, but I decided to leave and go to work in 1905. I remember living under the rule of Miss Kirkland in Spencer after the bad fire. I remember shorthand and typing classes with Professor Forney. The First President

Virginia McLester Thompson Oliver '60 is the first woman president of the North Carolina Association of County Commissioners since the organization was founded eighty years ago. This honor is the result of hard work and perseverance. Virginia began her political career in 1978 when her husband, Larry, died of a heart attack. She was asked to take his seat on the Cumberland County Board of Commissioners and served for nine months. Then another person was nominated to run for the seat. Virginia found that she really enjoyed the work and that the political arena was not as "foreign" as she had expected. So, she decided to run for the board the next time around. She won the election in 1980, and again in 1984. To help her in her job she entered graduate school at East Carolina University and earned master's degree in public administration in 1981. Virginia is very proud of her position and she gives credit to UNC-G "for giving me the opportunity to grow and gain leadership skills while I was at school, especially when women were not welcome at most schools." End of a Voyage

Julie Tripp Middleton '69, her husband, Jim, and their three sons, Tripp, Julian, and Allan, are home after a fifteen-month sailing adventure to the Mediterranean Sea on their fifty-foot sailboat Southerly. The summer 1984 issue of Alumni News bid them "bon voyage." They sailed uncounted miles and visited Spain, the Balearic Islands, Greece, Turkey, Crete, Corsica, and Sardinia. They anchored at Kusadasi in the winter and traveled by train through Bulgaria and Yugoslavia. In December 1984, they reached Salzburg and celebrated Christmas with Mozart concerts and candlelight. On such a trip where so much could have gone wrong, nothing did. They had no emergencies and no one got bored. Returning home in October to school, job, and home they looked forward to things that they had once taken for granted: washing machines, drinkable water, fully stocked grocery stores, pizza, and barbecue. During their adventure they got to know each other as many families never will, and they have memories (some of which are preserved on 4,000 slides) that will be cherished all their lives.

Fourth, by whose authority is justice the highest level? Primarily we discuss the philosophies of Christ, justice by the golden rule; Plato, justice as development; Kant, justice as a categorical imperative; Dewey, categories of moral reasoning; Durkheim, justice as group authority; Mill, justice as utilitarianism; and Rawls, justice as reversibility.

Fifth, why call a moral decision an act of reasoning? Piaget's position on cognitive developmental theory is that the way we think about phenomena changes over time due to changes in cognitive structures. Only people who have developed to higher levels of reasoning can comprehend and apply higher levels of justice. The higher levels of moral reasoning are more adequate because a person can see all sides and can envision the broad outcome. Only principles of moral reasoning can be transferred from one situation to another.

And finally, adequate "just" societal laws can be developed only with a priori understanding of universal principles of equity.

Sixth, if there is a highest level of justice, then what are the lower levels and what is the research methodology? Kohlberg's Developmental Theory of Moral Reasoning has three levels and five stages.

Level I

Egotic Level of Justice

Stage 1 Fairness as obedience to avoid punishment

Fairness as punishment for deviance

Stage 2 Fairness as quantitative equality

Fairness as equal exchange

Level II

Group Perspective Level of Justice

Stage 3 Fairness as fulfilling the role of doing what is expected of you

Stage 4 Fairness as following group rules or laws for a stable and secure society

Fairness as expecting others to comply or take the consequences

Fairness as uniform and regular administration of the rules

Level III

Universal Level of Justice

Stage 5 Fairness as principle of equity in law making

Fairness as criterion for the blueprint of society

Fairness as due process

Seventh, what are the necessary and sufficient conditions for moral reasoning development? The necessary conditions include cognitive development, social perspective taking, ego development and the sense of justice. To move up through the necessary levels of development requires the sufficient condition of experiencing a moral dilemma.

Eighth, what is a major challenge to Kohlberg's theory? Gilligan's ethic of care and responsibility. It contains three levels. On Level I is care of self only. Level II is the care for others only. Level III is for the self and others. ■ between humans and the divine.

In this latter theological context God is seen as perpetually standing outside the realm of human conventional life, symbolized in the myth by the forest, always calling to his devotees to leave behind their worldly affections and preoccupations and to enter into a deeply personal and loving relationship with him. This love raises the devotee above the difficulties and attachments of worldly life and struggle, rendering the world an illusion compared with the intense love experienced in relation to Krishna. The ideal devotee is female, for women best carry in them the capacity for selfless love, and thus represent the paradigm for human religious attainment.

In my lectures I often explore these themes through a presentation of the myth, poetry and paintings of Radha and Krishna in relation to traditional Hindu classifications of types of religious experiences attainable through this mode of devotional belief and practice. ■ east and one in the west, but they will come hereafter. Yours is first." (Loud applause.)

The deed was done, and Judge Gilmer was called upon to adjourn the brief session.

As the elated audience filed out, the Board lingered for one more decision; by previous agreement, they then and there formally elected Charles D. McIver (who was not in the city) as president of the institution, and Edward A. Alderman as a professor.

One sequel of this historic Thursday and Friday evening must still be recorded. A few evenings later "a huge crowd of business men" assembled in the Court House "for the purpose of organizing the election on the question whether or not the city should issue bonds to the amount of $30,000 for the Industrial School." Those in attendance heard a number of spirited addresses and then proceeded to organize local committees to "agitate" the question in each of the city's seven wards. The public referendum was held on July 28, and when the afternoon papers went to press that day, the vote stood at 723 to 0 in favor of the bond issue.

In a later piece we promise some account of the reaction in the towns who had lost the school to Greensboro, as well as a report on the Board's initial indecision in making a choice as between the half-dozen Greensboro campus sites that had been made available to them. ■

University Annual Giving

Where's My Envelope?

by Gaye Barbour Clifton '81

Director, University Annual Giving

The phone rings in the Development Office. The voices are different, but the questions are the same: "Have you forgotten me?" "Does the University have all the money it needs this year?" "Why didn't I receive a mailing from Annual Giving this year?" The answer to the first two questions is an emphatic "No!" The last question is a bit more involved, but after a hundred or so such calls and letters, it's time for an explanation.

In an effort to emphasize the public university's need for private support, the "new and improved" version of our University Annual Giving Program is incorporating several significant changes, including a more personal and direct approach to seeking alumni support.

Rather than the typical brochure and return envelope mailed in the fall, alumni are being contacted through a new phone-mail program. This program, which lasts through the end of June, grew out of the University's successful National Alumni Phonothons. A letter from Alumni Association President Mary Elizabeth Barwick Sink explaining UNC-G's strengths and needs is being sent to alumni across the nation. Students are then phoning alumni to give them an opportunity to help the University meet these pressing needs. But the personal approach does not stop here.

There is much excitement at the University about UNC-G's progress and plans for the future. Sharing this excitement through University staff visits with alumni groups and individuals in planned for the upcoming months.

The UNC-G Advocates Program has also seen some changes.

Where there were previously three levels of recognition for contributors to the University, there are now five membership programs. A special membership has been created which allows those alumni who received their initial degree within the last five years to join any one of these giving societies at "half-price" and still enjoy all the benefits of regular membership. And for the first time ever, lifetime membership in the Chancellor's Society and the University Associates will be awarded for cumulative lifetime gifts of $250,000 and $100,000 respectively.

Along with the addition of new programs comes the deletion of an old one. As of November 1, 1985,

UNC-G Advocates Program

Chancellor's Society

$2,500 per year

- University chair (for charter membership)
- Black-tie gourmet dinner with the Chancellor
- Golf outing
- Invitations and privileges accorded to the following societies

University Associates

- An evening on the campus featuring dinner and a theatre production
- Invitations and privileges accorded to the following societies

McIver Society $500 per year

- Calendar featuring campus scenes
- Chancellor's reception

The Benefactors $250 per year

- Limited edition campus print
- Spring picnic in the park
- Invitations and privileges accorded to the following society

Century Club $100 per year

- Special listing in the Honor Roll
- Homecoming barbecue and soccer game
- Use of Jackson Library
- Discount on University Concert/Lecture Series tickets

memberships in the 1892 Society were no longer available. Privileges formerly given at this level have been transferred to the Century Club level. Current members will retain full membership privileges until time for renewal.

UNC-G has made much progress in the last decade, but we have seen only a portion of what can be accomplished with the increased support of our alumni. Broadening the base of alumni support is very important to the University's future. So in answer to all the questions: Yes, we still have the Annual Giving Program. Yes, you are still on our mailing list. And, most importantly, Yes, you can make a difference because UNC-G alumni care. ■

A "Birds-Eye View of the City of Greensboro, NC, 1891." Published by Burleigh Lithographing Establishment, Troy, NY. By 1891 there were 41 named city streets.

by Dr. Richard Bardolph

Our last chapter sketched some of the events leading to the public meetings at which Greensboro tardily — and somewhat irregularly — entered the race to become the home of the Normal and Industrial Institute which the North Carolina General Assembly had authorized by its statute of February 18, 1891. Before we look in upon those two fateful evening sessions of Thursday and Friday, June 11 and 12, some preliminary matters should be introduced.

Although we have previously suggested that these "mass meetings" were hastily cobbled together and then hustled to their successful conclusion, there is strong reason to believe that the town as a whole hardly was aware of what was going forward even though a strongly worded public suggestion that the city get into the competition had been circulated more than a month earlier. While the Greensboro Record seems not to have published the State Superintendent of Public Instruction's official invitation for bids from interested cities and had given no further news or editorial support of the opportunity it afforded (and had, in fact, on June 9 — the very day when the bids were eventually opened in Raleigh — reported that Graham had made a strong offer and deserved to win the race), the Greensboro Patriot had followed a different course.

Unlike the Record, the Patriot

did publish the official call for bids, on March 26, and a week later followed it with an extended editorial in which, with more enthusiasm than foresight, the editor declared:

"as every town in the State is going to put in a big bid Greensboro should be determined to leave no stone unturned if that will help bring this institution to our town. It is readily admitted by every one that the location of this institution at Greensboro would be a grand thing for the town. The City of Flowers is undoubtedly the best place in the State for its location, as it is the most central point, exceedingly easy of access, there being six lines of railroad entering the city. Board can be gotten very cheaply, and lastly Greensboro is noted far and wide as a health resort . . . [Even so] Greensboro will have to offer big inducements. The Steel Company will doubtless offer a free site . . . and our citizens should have a big mass meeting and agitate this matter . . . Let every business man in town make up his mind to be liberal and for once in our lives show the world that we are not dead."

The Patriot's next issue (April 9) reinforced this exhortation by publishing the full text of the legislature's statute that authorized the school. Yet there is no evidence that the movement caught on except in a limited fashion. There was no "mass meeting [to] agitate this question," no further newspaper promotion, until, as we have seen, the date for submitting offers had passed, and only then did a relatively small though influential number of citizens quickly contrive to stage a public assemblage to go beyond the bids that had been submitted by the three towns — Durham, Graham, and Thomasville — which had played by the rules and presented their individual cases at the appointed time and place.

The somewhat fragmentary evidence available to us now permits two theories. Either a group of public-spirited men, well before the time set for submitting proposals, had confidentially, if not clandestinely, agreed that if the school were to be captured for Greensboro, the most promising strategy — despite the obvious perils of entering a proposal after the others had been more regularly received and the competition formally closed — would be to let the bid-opening pass, and then win by force majeure by communicating an offer for immediate action which, the Board of Directors could not afford to refuse.

Or — and this seems more likely — there was not only no wide public enthusiasm for entering the race; there was not even an organized plan by promoters of the movement, until the very day (or conceivably a few days earlier) of the formal bidding, when there was no time left for Greensboro to prevail if the effort moved through prescribed channels. Besides, one continues to wonder about the possibility that Dr. Benbow, a prime mover in the June 11 and 12 meetings in Greensboro, had laid the groundwork in his hasty trip to Raleigh on June 8 (the day before the bid meeting called by the Board for June 9) to confer with Maj. Finger, chairman of the proposed school's Board of Directors (which was also serving as the committee to locate the institution). Was a bargain struck on that occasion? Perhaps that will never be known.

The reader is reminded that the legislation creating the school prescribed that its Board of Directors be comprised of one person from each of the state's nine Congressional districts, plus the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, who would be its chairman. One of the Board's first duties was to select a site for the school. During the three or four days with which this article deals, the Board was functioning as the Committee on Locating, but it will be referred to in this essay as the Board of Directors, or simply as "the Board."

Let us summarize events up to this point. The public announcement calling for proposals from interested cities had appeared in a number of the State's newspapers in early April. Propositions were received at a full meeting of the Board, called for that purpose in Raleigh on June 9, from only three towns — Durham, Graham, and Thomasville. All sent delegations to the session to plead their city's cause. Another diffident offer was received by mail from agents of the defunct Floral College at Maxton, which had no cash, but only a more or less abandoned college campus to donate and was, therefore, not taken seriously. It is important to note that no official proposal had been received from Greensboro.

When that meeting was concluded, the Board announced its intention to go on what in retrospect seems to have been a perfunctory inspection tour of the three contesting towns. Press reports indicate that the group (traveling without Chairman Finger, who was detained in Raleigh "on public business") left Raleigh for Durham immediately after breakfast on Wednesday, June 10. After touring Durham's tendered sites, they attended a luncheon sponsored by the town's spokesmen. The delegation then set out again, and, according to the Graham Gleaner of June 18, "they came to Graham, looked at and admired the locations, ate supper, and departed for Thomasville," where they arrived at 11:30 pm.

Then, before 9 am the next morning (Thursday, June 11) they had not only made a whirlwind tour of the prospects at Thomasville but had eaten breakfast there and had arrived in Greensboro. Board members explained to their flustered hosts in Thomasville that they were obliged to hurry to Greensboro because that town was also preparing to make an offer. By this time Maj. Finger had received a telegram requesting him to join the group in Greensboro, as he did later in the day. As the Graham Gleaner later described the episode (in its June 18 issue):

"Before 12 o'clock [Thursday noon?] each place anxiously and confidently expected a dispatch saying, 'you have secured the School.' But it did not come. Graham guaranteed her bonds and dispatched to that effect. Later it was learned that Greensboro — Greensboro! — had offered $25,000 and a site (on Thursday evening). The message was sent to Durham also and a quick answer asked for. The 'quick' was left off the message to Graham, but she raised the bid to the same and would like to know how much money it would take to get the school. No figures were named. All this time the Greensboro folks were busy as beavers running hither and thither getting subscriptions to knock the other applicants out who had entered the race at the beginning and made a square manly fight for the School." [Thomasville incidentally, had responded much as Graham and Durham did. RB.]

We know also that the Board, after Thursday, spent the rest of that day and all of the next in consultation with the Greensboro committee and other citizens who were planning the coup. The Durham

Sun editorialized that if the Board had spent as much time in that city as it had in Greensboro, Durham would have become the school's home; but a review of the course of events in retrospect now points to a competition that was very little more than window-dressing, one from which only one predetermined outcome was likely to result.

While the precise state of affairs up to Thursday evening must remain somewhat clouded with ambiguities, the particulars about the two evening sessions in which the whole matter was successfully brought off by the Greensboro boosters is a matter of detailed record. After peremptorily short notice the Thursday evening assembly began promptly at 8:30 pm at the Court House. According to press reports, it was "not largely attended, but those who were present manifested a deep interest in the matter." At the suggestion of Dr. D. C. Benbow (the prominent Greensboro Quaker, businessman, civic leader, philanthropist, and hotel owner), J. R. Mendenhall, president of the city's Chamber of Commerce, was called to the chair, and the newspaper reporters who were in attendance were asked to act as secretaries of the meeting. The next morning's Record reported that the occasion, called by Mayor Forbis and J. R. Mendenhall, was "one of the most enthusiastic public meetings ever held in this city."

Almost at once, the floor was given to Professor M.C.S. Noble of Wilmington, a member of the proposed school's Board of Directors. Speaking for his fellow Board members, some of whom were in the chamber, Professor Noble alluded to the nature and importance of the institution now in the process of creation, and announced that the central purpose of the gathering was to help determine where the new school was to be situated. He then summarized the offers that had been made by Graham, Durham, and Thomasville — the highest of which was Durham's offer of $22,000 and a ten-acre site. His concluding remarks left little doubt that a superior offer from Greensboro might still carry the day.

Thereupon Judge J. A. Gilmer rose to speak "at length and with zeal" in favor of locating in Greensboro, and disclosed that he had expected to hear today from a committee appointed by a group of interested citizens. Additional inspirational remarks were made by Hon. D. F. Caldwell, State Senator John L. King, Mayor James W. Forbis and "many others." Then, as if on cue, Mr. R. R. King, speaking for the town's ad hoc committee, offered a series of four resolutions for the meeting's adoption, the first of which declared it to be the sense of the meeting that securing the school would be "greatly to the interest of our citizens generally." A second affirmed that the city could well afford to raise $25,000 for the purpose, by means of "bonds or otherwise to be met by taxation"; a third undertook to "pledge the city to the payment of twenty-five thousand dollars," subject to a referendum of the town's qualified voters; and a fourth bound every person present to "do all within his power" to secure a favorable decision in a forthcoming election.

Then, following an appropriate response from B. F. Aycock (another member of the future Normal School's Board of Directors), Col. R. M. Douglas rose to second the resolutions, "giving them hearty and enthusiastic support." This served as a signal to Judge Gilmer to take the floor once more, this time to speak "at some length, urging with great earnestness the location of the school here, and offered to be one of fifty to subscribe $500, or one of twenty-five to pledge $1,000, to make the guarantee to bring the institution to the city." Further remarks were made by Dr. Benbow, Mr. Woodroffe, Mr. J. L. King, and Hon. D. F. Caldwell, and "a letter was read from Mr. W. D. McAdoo, offering to give four acres of land as a site for the school."

After the resolutions were adopted by a unanimous vote, J. L. King proposed still another:

"Now, therefore, in order to make certain the payment of said sum, should the city fail to subscribe and appropriate the same by vote or otherwise, we whose names are hereto subscribed, each for himself, hereby agrees and promises to pay to said, The Normal and Industrial School, the sum opposite his name, to be paid as the directors of said school shall call for the same."

Those present gave their approval by coming forward, and, one by one, signing their names and entering their pledges. The first to sign, with a pledge of $1,000, was J. L. King, followed by Dr. Benbow for the same amount. Upon completion of the process, fifty-eight signers had pledged a total of $18,840. When the result was announced, twenty of the original signers added second pledges, bringing the new total to $24,415, whereupon the Greensboro Steel and Iron Company's representative supplied the remaining $585 to bring the total to the desired $25,000.

The individual pledges ranged from $2,000 downward to nine offers of $10, and one modest guarantee of $5. Led by two $2,000 profers from Dr. Benbow and the South Greensboro Investment Co.; $1,500 from Judge Gilmer, the Odell Hardware Co., J. L. King, the J. W. Scott Co.; $1,000 from T. C. Worth, the Central Land Co., the Greensboro Land Co. and the Worth-Wharton Real Estate and Investment Co., the totals show that one-fourth of the individual promises accounted for more than 85 per cent of the total raised while about two-thirds of the pledges were for $100 or less. The guarantees (which in the end cost the promoters nothing, since the pledges were to be called in only if the bond election should fail — and, of course, it did not) came largely from the comparatively affluent, particularly from business firms, and — above all — from companies and individuals engaged in the sale of city land or heavily invested in it; land which would presumably rise in value. It is hardly necessary to add that land values would increase with the establishment of the school in its neighborhood.

Finally, the chair appointed one committee of ten to wait upon the city's Board of Commissioners with a request to schedule a bond referendum, another to confer with the Board of Directors, and a third to "canvass the city."

A matter of great delicacy now remained to be disposed of, for the Board of Directors had the unpleasant task of conveying to Graham, Thomasville and Durham the news of what had transpired in Greensboro. So, during the night, telegrams were sent to the appropriate agents of the cities who had made the original bids, asking for their response to the unexpectedly changed circumstances. Press reports indicate that the wires were received Friday morning.

Once sufficiently recovered from their consternation to act, all three quickly sent revised bids to meet the Greensboro threat. When these replies were received in Greensboro, additional impromptu discussions between the Greensboro citizens' committee and the school's Board members — who quickly arranged another public meeting, this time at Benbow Hall — took place. Some of the newspaper dispatches on these surprising proceedings disclose that these plans were agreed upon late in the day, Friday, June 12, although they must have been anticipated by the principal parties, for, as we have previously recorded, Chairman Sidney Finger of the Board had written Dr. McIver privately on June 10 that "a final meeting will be held in Greensboro on Friday." But, whatever the insiders may have known, the larger group who had participated in the previous evening's eventful session must have been less fully informed; indeed, the papers reported a day or two later that the second "mass meeting" was so hastily convened that in many cases the call for a six o'clock session gave delegates less than an hour's notice.

Even so, by now it was clear to the principal organizers of the whole effort that the "sufficiently good proposition" that Maj. Finger had hoped to elicit from Greensboro was within easy reach. In fact, the outcome was so predictable that the editor of the Greensboro Daily Workman had the story set in type even before the meeting was under way. Dr. J. M. Spainhour, one of the Board members, was quoted in the Workman as having said, "Why, it couldn't have been more than fifteen minutes after the matter was decided in the Hall that someone handed me a Workman containing the result of the entire proceedings." When the editor was asked to comment, he modestly admitted:

"The Workman had watched the proceedings from the outside and felt assured that the Industrial School would come here. With that faith it had been written and set up in type, and was ready to be sent through the press at a moment's warning. In other words, the gun was loaded, aim was taken, and it only lacked the word 'Fire!'"

The proceedings can be quickly summarized, for all surviving accounts agree that the main business of the meeting was over in about fifteen minutes. Dr. Benbow was called to the chair and made what one journalist called "the speech of his life," to a cheering audience who were told that the Board of Directors had decided upon Greensboro but that because her bid was $5,000 less than the aggregate pledged by each of the other towns in their revised offers, Major Finger "thought they would be censured if the School was located at a town offering less than $30,000." Then, when Benbow asked whether the city should, at the forthcoming bond election, be requested to approve the higher figure, the assembly shouted its approval, and a unanimous vote was recorded.

It now remained to raise the earlier total of $25,000 in pledges to the new figure, as a guarantee that the funds would be available even if the referendum should fail. Again, it was only a matter of minutes to receive a sufficient number of increased pledges from those present. The sum was oversubscribed: $5,700 was offered, bringing the new total to $30,711.

That done, Dr. Benbow "went for the committee on location and they came into the Hall." Maj. Finger spoke for the Board, and Mayor Forbis thanked the Directors "for the prompt action in locating in our city the coming school of the State." Maj. Finger's remarks were summarized by a reporter as being approximately as follows:

"I am glad to know of the vote just completed. (Loud cheering.) It secures for Greensboro the Normal and Industrial School for Girls. I believe it will grow into a great State school. Not for poor people alone, but for both rich and poor. I congratulate Greensboro on the result. I believe this is the proper place for it. Piedmont is the coming part of the State. I believe in co-education of the sexes, and believe and hope that the institution today located here may grow into a school for both sexes. There will be two other similar schools, one in the

UNC-G's A Bargain

Education writers at The New York Times rate UNC-G as one of the 221 best bargains in America in their book, The Best Buys in College Education. The authors surveyed 2,000 four-year public and private colleges and universities before their findings were published by the book division of The Times. Here are some of the things they say about UNC-G:

"Among the University's wide range of high quality academic departments are arts and humanities, especially English/creative writing, speech pathology and audiology, and theater. Physical education, public health education, recreation and leisure studies, and the dance department have strong national reputations."

They say that the School of Music is well regarded nationally and note that the new School of Business and Economics already has achieved national recognition for its accounting department. They note that the School of Home Economics has the only clothing and textile program in the UNC system and that the School of Nursing is the largest in the state with 96 per cent of its graduates practicing professionally.

SHEPERD Awards

The School of Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance announced the first recipients of the newly-established SHEPERD Alumni Awards. The SHEPERD Award recognizes UNC-G alumni who have made a significant contribution, through scholarship, leadership or service, in career or civic involvement. The first recipients of the award are Paula Hudson Hildebrand '74, Linda "Bayne" Inman McLester '59, Barbara Ann Yoder '67, and Dan B. Young (MSPE) '78.

Paula Hudson Hildebrand majored in school health education. Since graduation she has taught in the Charlotte schools and at Discovery Place, Charlotte's health and science museum, and has also earned a master's degree in human development and learning at UNCC. Paula is currently the school health education coordinator for the Shelby and Kings Mountain Schools. She is also president-elect for the North Carolina Association for the Advancement of Health Education.

Linda "Bayne" Inman McLester majored in physical education. Being an active volunteer has become a way of life for her. For over twenty years she has contributed to the life of Rockingham, NC, through teaching fitness classes for the Parks and Recreation Department, serving on the YMCA Board, the Richmond County Recreation Commission and Advisory Board, and providing leadership in other civic organizations and her church.

Barbara Ann Yoder received an interdepartmental recreation degree with an emphasis on special populations. Barbara has held several positions in therapeutic recreation, and is currently the director of recreation therapy, department of psychiatry at the Duke University Medical Center. She has served on various professional committees, presented papers at conferences and workshops, lectured at several universities, and regularly provides field work experiences for senior majors in UNC-G's therapeutic recreation program.

Dan B. Young is currently a consultant in physical education in the SC Department of Education. He took this position in 1982, after teaching and coordinating physical education programs and establishing a school-community recreation program in Landrum,

South Carolina, where he had taught since 1971. Dan's work in Landrum brought him awards recognizing his teaching excellence and community service.

1960 Memorial Plaque

A plaque reading "1960 Memorial Garden" has been attached to the brick wall that encloses the nook outside the north end of the Alumni House. The memorial to deceased classmates is a project of the Class of 1960 in conjunction with the University. The project was initiated in 1975 at a class reunion. The garden includes shrubs and flowers, a stone walkway, and two wooden benches. Sandy Margolis Smiley of Spartanburg, SC, is Everlasting President of the Class.

A Family Exhibition

Alma Sharpe Garlow '34 has loaned the University a collection of eighteen hand-carved dolls that are on display in the lobby of the School of Home Economics in Alumna Alma Garlow '34 with Lavina Franck, assistant professor, department clothing and textiles.

Stone Building. Entitled "An American Family: 1630-1900," the nine couples in the collection are dressed in period costumes — their Sunday best. The dolls represent nine generations of a family from 1630 to 1900. They are carved from horse chestnut (a tree native to Eurasia) and are about a foot tall. The set is one of only six complete sets made and registered with the National Institute of American Doll Artists.

Alma is a doll collector and a member of the National Institute of Doll Artists. Helen Bullard, a renowned dollmaker, made the eighteen dolls. She is founder of the National Institute of American Doll Artists.

Herbs on Display

The University now has a showcase for herbs, thanks to members of the North Carolina Botanical Garden Herb Volunteers. The new perennial herb border replaces the annual flower border in Taylor Garden, which is the green rectangle with the goldfish pond that is sandwiched among Elliott University Center, Alumni House, and the Chancellor's Residence.

Mercer Reeves Hubbard '35, Pat Aulick, Mary Smith, and Wayne Goodall, all of whom work with the Botanical Garden in Chapel Hill, furnished ideas, designs, and plants. Retired UNC-G grounds superintendent Charles Bell was called on for advice. Carolyn Owen '64, a member of the UNC-G grounds staff, set out herbs in early November. A stone walkway was built through the border, too.

Mercer and other Botanical Garden volunteers donated some 300 plants of about 70 varieties, ranging from the commonplace to the exotic. Although they have been planted, the work with the border is ongoing. "We could certainly use volunteers," Carolyn said. Alumni, faculty, and staff are invited to help care for the border with weeding and planting or suggesting designs. Any and all help will be welcome.

The Ashby Dialogues

Support is needed to establish the Ashby Dialogues as a memorial to the late Dr. Warren Ashby who served the University long and well as a distinguished member of the faculty.

A Dialogue will be an annual event such as an interdisciplinary forum, a retreat to address University concerns, or a summer institute designed to reflect Dr. Ashby's view that a University is freedom in the search and service of truth.

Dr. Ashby was a retired professor of philosophy and religious studies, and former director of both the Residential College and the honors program. He died this past fall.

Contributions to support the Ashby Dialogues may be made to The UNC-G Excellence Foundation in care of The Development Office, Alumni House, UNC-G Greensboro, NC 27412. Additional information may be obtained by calling Dr. James Clotfelter at 919-379-5093 (O) or 273-5250 (H). Dr. Clotfelter, a professor of political science at UNC-G, is general chairman of the effort to establish the Dialogues.

A scholarship in memory of Dr. Ashby already has been established.

Dr. Warren Ashby

It will award $1,000 annually to a rising junior at the University, and is renewable for the senior year.

William and Frances Mueller of Baltimore, MD, have pledged $33,000 for the scholarships. Dr. Mueller was a member of the English department faculty at UNC-G from 1951 to 1959, and a close friend of Dr. Ashby.

Pioneers for the UNC-G Herb Garden are Carolyn Owen, Mercer Hubbard, Charles Bell, Mary Smith, Pat Aulick, and Wayne Goodall. Interested volunteers should contact Carolyn at 379-5485.

50 Years Ago in Alumnae News . . .

“In any part of the public school this fact must be kept in mind — that the finished product is of no consequence, but whatever happens to the individual through the process of creating that product is vastly important.”

So wrote Mr. Gregory D. Ivy in an article, “Art Education As I See It,” which appeared in the February 1936 issue of Alumnae News.

“Teachers of art,” he continued, “must be developed who have a knowledge of real life, who possess a feeling of tolerance towards viewpoints, ideas, policies, and cultures other than their own and who have an independent, critical attitude which is flexible and fluid. They must be individuals who are continually growing, continually discarding old and worn ideas, and ever seeking new and fresh sources of inspiration from the life around them, for their own creative efforts and for the inspiration of those people with whom they work.”

Mr. Ivy, a bespectacled, mustachioed artist, arrived on the campus of the Woman’s College in the fall of 1935 to establish the art department. He would stay to develop the art program, to found the Weatherspoon Art Gallery, and to teach a generation of young artists and art teachers. He left WC in 1960. Mr. Ivy passed away on January 12, 1985 — too early to enjoy the celebrations the University has planned for the fiftieth anniversary of the department of art.

“Art,” according to Mr. Ivy, “must carry forward the development of an individual who has a clear vision of the wholeness of life, the unity and rhythms of living. It is essential that students have a realization of the social and cultural contributions of the art of the past as it has taken its place in the complicated pattern of experiences contributing to a higher degree of real civilization; but they need to have also the realization that the art of any age must look forward, must express itself in terms of its age regardless of the turbulence of the times or the direction taken by a new social order. Anything else would be an attempt at escape from the reality of life, and such art would be decadent and would lack vitality and freshness of vision.”
